Topics for Discussion

Frey

The Twelfth Day of Yule is January 1, or New Year's Day. Going back farther in time than anyone can seem to remember, the traditional meal on New Year's Day consists of pork and sauerkraut, both of which are sacred to Frey, to bring about success and prosperity in the New Year. While Frey was not known by that particular name within the Deutsch culture, it is fortuitous enough to have foods associated with Him being eaten on a day on which our ancestors used that meal to seek prosperity and fortune, which are also associated with Him. Thus, via some "dot connecting," we honor Frey on this day.

Luul

Luul is an entity with scant oral lore in Hexerei traditions. He is associated with the surviving greens, the earliest new greens on the land, and with seedlings, which He is said to protect and to make hardy during the roughest time of the winter. Through discussions on the Urglaawe community group on Facebook, we have looked into a possible link between Luul and the Frankish god, Lollus (or Lullus). Lollus is depicted as holding His tongue, presumably because He is youthful (maybe even "Baby New Year" youthful?). Indeed, His name is linguistically related to "lollipop" and "lullabye," so the tongue and the mouth appear to be important features.

Some scholars link Luul to Frey in terms of fertility. Grapes and ears of grain were given to Lollus, and He wore a wreath of poppy flowers around His neck.

There is still much conjecture in the understanding of Luul, so our viewpoints will alter as we engage in more research and in more practice of honoring Him.

Wreath Burning

It is after the Feast of Frey that we burn the Yule wreaths containing New Year's Resolutions to close out the observance.
